“deep wallpaper” in Pocket Film Festival at the Pompidou Centre, Paris

Background

Current international developments in screen arts have focussed on the mobile phone as the latest site for the production, distribution and exhibition of experimental and innovative works.

Contribution

The Pocket Film Festival brought together an international collection of artists and media activists working in the field of mobile phone technologies. My contribution, “deep wallpaper”, five small video loops, arrives at a new benchmark whereby the restrictions of the medium, particularly the small screen size became an aesthetic advantage comparable to the graphic innovation of the postage stamp.

Significance

The significance of this research is that it showed that themes developed in painting around colour and the look of wet paint could become innovative content for video and new screen media. Five of my works were selected to be shown at the Pompidou Centre, a highly esteemed venue for developments in the arts.
